Extraterrestrial life on the Sun

Albert Einstein famously stated: "Imagination is more important than knowledge. For knowledge is limited to all we now know and understand, while imagination embraces the entire world, and all there ever will be to know and understand."

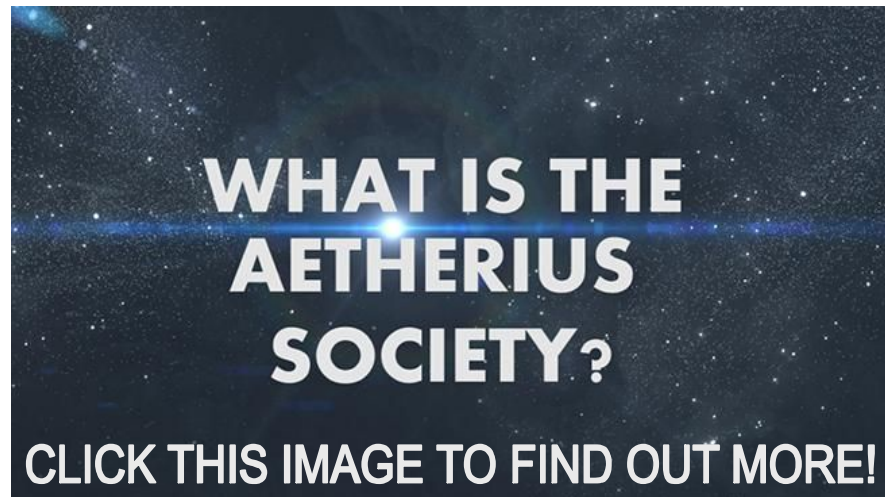

This same principle is even more applicable not just to the world, but to the universe as a whole. We have so little knowledge of the universe – relative to its vastness – that often we have little choice but to rely on imagination. Imagination, I believe, is key to understanding life on other planets. Not because life on other planets is fictional, but because it takes imagination to visualise anything beyond our previous range of experience – whether that thing is true or not. In short: we need imagination to believe anything that we have not actually experienced personally.

All too often people dismiss an idea simply because it falls too far outside of their comfort zone. Too far from what they themselves have seen. Too far from what they have been conditioned into believing. This is not scientific, though it may sometimes be mislabeled as such; it is a lack of imagination. Thank God – literally – that now the imagination of the general public seems, by and large, to have broadened sufficiently to accept the idea that we are not alone in the universe. This is a fantastic step forward. But when it comes to what or where extraterrestrial life may actually be, people are, perhaps understandably, more reticent even to speculate.

One thing I concluded early on in my quest for the truth about life on other planets was that we should be very reticent to rule anything out. Look at the tremendous variety of life on Earth! There are creatures we know exist in the oceans of this planet, far more exotic than the average sci-fi alien. When you multiply this degree of variety on a single planet by the tremendous distances and environmental differences existing in the cosmos – you are left with the possibility of life so alien as to literally defy conception.

The possibility of the existence of life “not as we know it” is, I believe, slowly gaining credibility. Strangely, science fiction has to some degree helped us, on an unconscious level, to accept and embrace what will one day be science fact. When we see alien life forms in fiction, it stimulates the imagination to wonder if such things might not be so far from reality.

But, trite though it may sound, sometimes truth really is even stranger than fiction. And so it should be. After all, fiction is nothing more than the limited imagination of a human being – how could the brain of any man, woman or child – even in its wildest most unrestrained cosmic fantasy – hope to conceive of the multiplicity of infinity itself. According to the space contacts of Dr. George King, founder of The Aetherius Society, there is intelligent extraterrestrial life on other planets in this Solar System – and even on the Sun. If any readers should dismiss such a thing as impossible, I would point out the obvious fact that, of course, it is indeed impossible for terrestrial life, or anything similar, to live on the Sun, but as to whether or not life “not as we know it” could live there – this is, by definition, unknown by conventional science, one way or the other.

The concept of “solar life” is not new. Sun worship is a global phenomenon – albeit one now largely restricted to antiquity. Typically regarded as primitive and archaic, Sun worship actually makes a lot more sense than we may first like to admit. After all, we can at least see the Sun – whereas religion today, in large part, requires the exclusive worship of something invisible. Not only that, but we can feel the Sun’s emanations, and we can readily understand its role as a life-giver, and our dependence upon it.

What’s more – it even looks like a God; what could be more God-like in appearance than a colossal, dazzling, golden orb of light? It certainly has a much more awe-inspiring look about it than an old man on a cloud with a long beard! According to Dr. King’s extraterrestrial contacts, the Sun is in fact a living entity – unbelievable though that may sound. It is a vast cosmic intelligence which lives, thinks and feels – though obviously in a completely different way to how we live, think and feel.

Not only is it alive but it is – for want of a better term – a God. The creation and preservation of life on a global or cosmic scale is surely the work of a God – if one believes in such things – and, as far as we are concerned, what does this more than the Sun? The evolution of life as we know it on Earth could never have got underway without the Sun, and certainly couldn’t have continued without it. But the Sun does more even than this, in that life on Earth is not only in a state of preservation, but in a state of evolution. In other words, the Sun gives us the energy to advance and improve ourselves as living beings, if we take this opportunity. Surely this is the greatest aspect of the work of a God – helping lower life-forms to evolve. Not so much in a Darwinian sense, but more in terms of spiritual consciousness through countless different incarnations.

One extraterrestrial intelligence, communicating through Dr. King’s unique mediumship in a series of communications known as “The Twelve Blessings”, went one stage further even than the claim that the Sun is a God, in these stirring, otherworldly pronouncements:

“[The Sun] is the God of your Bible, it is the Brahma of the Hindu scripts.

“This is the nearest thing to God in your concept of manifestation.”

This has to be read carefully or it could be misunderstood. It doesn’t mean that the Sun is the one and only God in the universe, it means that the Sun is a God, and the closest thing to God that we can conceive of in our current state of consciousness on Earth. God, in its most unlimited sense, is of course far more than a sun – it is the creator of all manifestation; it is the essence of all life; it is literally everything and even more than that. But we cannot really conceive of everything, or of the essence of everything, or of the creator of everything – whereas we can conceive of the Sun, albeit in a rather limited way. This means that there is nothing in our conception that has a level of consciousness more elevated than this great being – nothing with a mind closer to the mind of God itself.

If we can take a sufficient leap of consciousness to accept at least the possibility, if not the reality, of the Sun being a living entity, then perhaps the idea of there being other life resident on this entity, becomes less difficult to swallow. In a series of communications given through Dr. King known as “The Nine Freedoms” we are told that highly evolved beings not only inhabit the Sun, but actually constitute its radiations:

“Together they blend, to form – the mighty Sun. Not the essential Life of the Sun, but its very radiations.”

In other words, these solar intelligences are not just there as a place to live, they actually work in complete harmony with the Sun as an entity, to radiate energy to other life-forms in the Solar System.

More extraordinary even than that, is the fact, according to Dr. King’s extraterrestrial sources, that it is the destiny of mankind to advance up to this incredibly elevated level of cosmic evolution. After reincarnating on this and other planets for millions of years, we will eventually be initiated into “Solar Existence”. Needless to say, we will be completely unrecognisable by that time; for one thing we will have gone through the process of “soul amalgamation”, meaning that we will be a completely harmonious combination of what are now separate intelligences. Our consciousness will have expanded beyond conception, after countless experiences throughout the galaxy, and probably even outside of the galaxy, preparing us for this life-cycle which is completely unlike anything we have experienced to date.

Rather than simply treating the concept of a “living Sun” as a matter of intellectual curiosity, or spiritual theory, there is in fact a very inspiring and motivating message behind it, as revealed by a cosmic communicator through Dr. King in 1958:

“As this Mighty Orb [i.e. the Sun] gives freely of its energy unto all life-streams in the Solar System, so must Terrestrial man give freely of his energy to those who need it. To those who, in the darkness suffer. To those who are in this darkness because they will not see – because they will not look – through their Eye, yet look they only through their eyes – and they see naught.”

The Sun does not go on holidays, it does not have sick-leave, it does not take time out to focus on itself – it works continuously, without any kind of pause, for billions of years, radiating essential life-giving energy to other life-forms less advanced than itself.

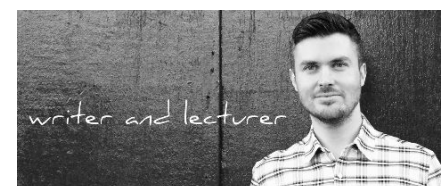

Naturally, we are not capable of doing anything like what a Sun does, but we can, in our own small way, emulate the example of the Sun, by using our own energy constructively to help others in need, rather than just leading lives of insular selfishness. If we do this, it is obvious common sense that the world will become a totally different place – free from the stupidity and barbarism of war and all the other absurdities that afflict terrestrial psychology in its current state. If we do take this step; if we begin to act more like a Sun, as much as we can, given our limitations – then, individually and as a planetary race, we will advance that little bit closer to the great initiation of “Solar Existence”.
