What is Extraterrestrial Life Really Like?

By Mark Bennett

If you believe in extraterrestrial life, you have probably gazed up at the stars and wondered: what is it really like? We hear stories about this race or that race that is supposedly visiting Earth – but what is true, and what is simply someone’s vivid imagination? However vivid someone’s imagination may be, it cannot compare to the unlimited imagination of the Creative Source that brought it all into being in the beginning. What are we really, after all, but figments of the Creator’s imagination, floating in its infinite sea of mind – one day to return to the macro-cosmic bliss of fully-conscious oneness...?!

Even some creatures in the seas of our own planet defy explanation – strange beyond the realms of what scientists have believed to be even possible – never mind thought might actually exist right under our very noses. The question: “What is extraterrestrial life really like?” is as big as the cosmos itself, but its vastness should not dissuade us from wondering – from believing – and from being inspired by the amazing universe in which we are so lucky to live.

In this article I will share with you some thoughts about these words (in bold) spoken by an extraterrestrial intelligence known as “Aetherius” – or “The Master Aetherius” – in deference to his great wisdom. In this communication to Earth, he was speaking through the trance mediumship of Dr. George King (1919-1997), in London in 1954 – in answer to a two-part question:

“Can you give us a little about the comparative chemistry of the physical bodies used on Venus? Is there any comparison with our chemistry of carbon compounds, for instance?”

It is rather complicated because a lot of us exist in subtle states and when we come to this Planet, or to Mars, or any other World, we build for ourselves a body to live on that Planet. These simple words tell us a great deal about life on other planets – and explain how life “not as we know it” is possible.

When you read the question, which talks about life on Venus, your internal incredulity monitor may have triggered an alarm of doubt in your thinking process. According to many so-called scientifically-minded people, we “know” that life does not exist on Venus – at least, certainly not intelligent life, because environmental conditions are too hostile there.

First of all, we do not know anything about life beyond Earth (officially at least) – therefore we are in no position whatsoever to judge what conditions are too hostile for it. There may even be sentient intelligences who can survive in the barren coldness of space itself. In fact there are indeed such beings – planets and stars, even galaxies, are in fact living beings, who reside in the apparent emptiness of ever-moving creation. But that’s another topic for another time...!

Secondly, when it comes to life beyond Earth – in fact even some life on Earth – what you see is not necessarily what you get.

We exist on one plane of existence – at one frequency of vibration. And most of us have absolutely no awareness of any other plane of existence. At least, not until we die, when a part of us leaves this plane and moves to a different one. This after-death plane is still physical, and still part of this Earth, but it is physical at a different frequency of vibration.

Such planes also exist on other planets. The plane or planes inhabited on Venus have environmental conditions completely different from what we can see on Venus. What does the Master Aetherius mean by “a lot of us exist in subtle states”? This refers to an intelligence existing as energy, rather than in a dense physical form like us.

There are in fact descriptions of extraterrestrial intelligences looking like large ovoids of light. Such beings are still “physical”, in the wider sense of the meaning of the word, but in a more “subtle” way. This is a very much more advanced state of existence than we are currently capable of on Earth, obviously. Even a spiritual Master on Earth, even on a higher physical plane between incarnations, could not take the form of a large ovoid of light like that of at least some of our planetary neighbours. Nevertheless, there will come a time, perhaps in thousands or even millions of years, when we too will evolve to that level where we can do this.

The Master Aetherius goes on to say that they can build themselves a body adapted to whatever planet they are visiting. This building process is not some ghastly Frankenstein-like abomination against nature – quite the reverse. They create such a body purely out of their own energy structure, by the power of their own thought. This is obviously an outstanding feat – utterly impossible to us on Earth – but, again, one day, we will evolve such that we too have this kind of extraordinary ability.

This not only means that they can survive in the environmental conditions of the planet they are visiting, but it must also facilitate friendly communication with the inhabitants, especially those at the lower levels of evolution, like us. Wouldn’t you find it easier, for example, to talk to someone who looked human, rather than trying to communicate with an ovoid of light?

If the people of that particular Planet have twenty-seven legs, as some people have in the Milky Way, then we can build a body with these twenty-seven legs.

This gives us a little taste of the multifarious variety existent even in our own galaxy – never mind beyond! It may sound fanciful to imagine a being with 27 legs – but we have creatures with more legs than that even on Earth. The only difference is that on Earth such beings are not “people”; they are not sentient beings like us.

But why shouldn’t they be sentient on another planet? The more we analyse it logically, rather than emotionally, the more plausible the idea becomes. If carbon is the basic cellular property, we can use this by drawing it out of the atmosphere and blending it in such a way as to form a cellular structure, in harmony with environmental conditions prevalent upon that particular Planet we are visiting. On the other hand, we can use a silicon base; certain plants have a silicon base. There are few people on Venus who use bodies of a coarser matter and these only when necessary – yet we are physical beings.

This is a very important aspect of understanding life beyond Earth – particularly for those of us who embrace the spiritual approach to ufology. The inhabitants of Venus are extremely advanced – literally millions of years ahead of us. And not just scientifically, but spiritually as well. In fact they are so advanced that science and spirituality are the same to them – both are the study and application of Truth. And yet, we are reminded here that they are physical – they are not nebulous “spirits” – they are real beings with real bodies.

It is not possible for me to give English names, for the constituents of the molecules of the subtle bodies, because you have no words to describe them.

This reinforces in our minds the fact that these beings are physical. Even though this physicality is on a higher energy plane it is still made of “molecules” – though how similar such molecules are to those that constitute our own bodies, we have no idea. So tenuous are these bodies, that it would be like giving a name to the molecules of your Soul, as it were.

This illustrates the fascinating way that extraterrestrial intelligences understand the continuum of physicality from the ordinary physical world that we know on Earth, right through to the physical existence of the soul – on a high energy plane. The soul is not some weird, magical, supernatural thing – but a “physical” part of us. Not physical like our arms and legs, obviously, but physical in the sense that it really does exist, and is comprised of smaller elements referred to, perhaps quite liberally here, as “molecules”. Such a thing could be measured, analysed, helped or hindered – just like any other part of us. It’s simply that the vibration of this aspect of our being is so elevated as to be beyond our current instrumentation and conventional scientific understanding.

It would be impossible to do that, unless you had a language like certain of the Planets with 25,000 symbols in the alphabet. That language is never written. This seems almost like a joke – and yet it is absolutely true. Beings from other planets do sometimes demonstrate a sense of humour, but a Venusian would never do so to the detriment of our understanding. If such a being makes a statement like this – it is a fact.

Advanced beings on other worlds do not need to use spoken language to communicate in the way that we do. They are advanced enough to have complete telepathic rapport with one another. Perhaps some of this, on some planets, is done through symbology – thought pictures, to put it very simply

(and probably rather inadequately). Such symbols may perhaps not be limited simply to a visual form, but have a sound attached to them, perhaps even a scent or other things we cannot even imagine.

Why would it not be written? Maybe because writing is totally unnecessary for the beings who use this language. Writing is primarily a way of spreading information, or recording information. These beings may have perfect memories, and be able to telepathically transmit whatever they wish to whomever they wish – and perhaps even to the entire planet at once. Such a world would have no need of writing.

These words of the Master Aetherius are far deeper than they first appear. They are like portals to the understanding of a whole different approach to understanding life in the galaxy – a vista of hitherto un contemplated possibilities that make our own world seem tiny by comparison.

And yet it is not to make us feel limited, or inferior, that we are told these things by the Master Aetherius. It is the exact opposite in fact – it is to inspire us to think beyond the confines of our own world; to encourage us to aspire to rejoin the great interplanetary family of which we are in fact already a part.

Now we are like the prodigal son – but we too will one day look upwards, and return to the fold – and our lives will no longer be life as we know it – but cosmic life – and cosmic freedom...!
